

We were looking for a ceramic style tile that matched the style of house we were trying to build. We really like this concrete option that gave us the look of ceramic tile – with its unique coloring option – and the durability of the concrete in our climate. Also, my builder had done research on local homes that had successfully used this brand of tile. In addition, we really liked the way we were able to customize the mix of the tile colors to get the exact look we were trying to achieve. Specifically, we were trying to create a roof that had a blend of colors, from red to an orangish/yellow tile – while at the same time not letting the roof look too “checker boardish”.

Regarding our installer (who was not from Vande Hey Raleigh) it seemed to take a very long time to install all of the tile, as we have a large roof with a lot of hips. The extra time and wait was well worth it.

Everybody that has commented on our roof really likes it a lot. They like the color choice, the style and the shine.
